

The Interdisciplinary Journal of International Studies

The graduate journal, IJIS, is an initiative of the Board of Studies for European Studies and Development & International Relations at Aalborg University, and is produced in co-operation with the DIRES students' association.

IJIS provides an international forum intended to develop an understanding of international relations from critical, problem-oriented and interdisciplinary perspectives. Encouraging contributions from a variety of perspectives and experiences, the journal is aimed at current and former students who are actively involved in issues related to cross-cultural, political, social and economic understandings of theoretical, methodological, conceptual and empirical studies of international relations.

The objective is furthermore to encourage insights from European Studies and Development & International Relations. Articles on topics such as regionalisation, European integration, foreign policy, North-South gap, European enlargement, social change, inequality, uneven development and economics are encouraged. Articles are expected to discuss and give insight into various theoretical perspectives and debates concerning concurrent international developments and aspects.

The journal is for and by students, current as well as former, and is thus dependent on their contributions in terms of articles, book reviews and review articles (book costs will be reimbursed for book reviews accepted in the journal). See the guidelines at the back of the journal or at our website, www.ijis.aau.dk, for more information.

We hope you enjoy the journal, and look forward to receiving your comments and contributions.
